Nova Hall is an accomplished public speaker, a published author, and a fine artist.

In 1999, Nova discovered the lost collection of his grandfather, Donald Hall, the engineer who designed the Spirit of St. Louis. A documentary about this discovery aired on The Learning Channel (TLC) in September 2001, marking the beginning of Nova's career in education, speaking, and fine art.

In addition to running his business, Nova raises a young daughter and volunteers actively for STEAM/STEM education, working directly with students, inspiring innovation in the STEM disciplines and speaking about the significance of risk-taking for aviation and for the future.

“This is a wonderful true story of two young men working together in 1927 to bring a dream to life.”
